Colorado Technical University Names New Chair of Associate in Nursing Degree Program
Janice G. Floyd Brings Nursing Education and Professional Experience to CTU Pueblo Campus

Pueblo, Colo. (August 10, 2010) - Colorado Technical University (CTU), a leading provider of education to career-motivated students, has appointed Janice G. Floyd as chair of the associate in nursing degree program at the Pueblo campus. In this role, Floyd will oversee all aspects of the program, including the curriculum, faculty, licensure and accreditation.

“I am very excited to further develop and enhance the associate in nursing degree program to help CTU Pueblo students get the practical knowledge they need to pursue careers in this growing field,” Floyd said. “Nursing is an evolving and rewarding profession that’s projected to expand both in Colorado and nationally. By providing a real-world education, we want our students to be prepared to take advantage of potential opportunities.”

The associate in nursing degree program at CTU Pueblo teaches students basic patient care techniques, assessment skills, intravenous therapy and how to assist clients with wellness needs. Graduates can pursue opportunities in long-term care and community settings.

Floyd brings more than 20 years of nursing education experience to her new role, including serving as an assistant nursing professor in obstetrics and community health at the University of North Carolina at Pembroke, and as the dean of nursing at Brunswick Community College in Supply, N.C. While at Brunswick Community College, Floyd developed and designed the school’s associate in nursing degree curriculum, in addition to establishing various evaluation tools to measure the program’s quality and effectiveness.

For her excellence in education, Floyd won a teacher of the year award at Brunswick Community College, as well as the North Carolina Practical Nurse Educator of the Year Award in 2001.

In addition to being an educator, Floyd has worked as a registered nurse for both public county health departments and various private practices throughout North Carolina. Her professional expertise includes obstetrics and home health nursing, which she bolstered by serving on the North Carolina Board of Nursing from 2004 – 2008.

Floyd is currently a doctoral candidate in nursing at East Carolina University, with an expected graduation in 2012. She also holds a master's degree in nursing education from Duke University and a bachelor's degree in nursing from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The CTU Pueblo campus offers degrees in the areas of business and management, criminal justice, health sciences, information systems and technology. CTU students can take courses on-campus, online or a combination of the two, providing flexible options that can be easily integrated into students' busy schedules.
